Flow of Armenian migrant workers to Russia may reduce

The flow of Armenian migrant workers to Russia may reduce, demographer Ruben Yeganyan believes. He is convinced that consequences of the Ukrainian crisis will be felt for a long time, and the situation will aggravate because of landslide in oil prices. This will lead to recession and decline in demand for labour force in Russia, affecting migrant workers from Armenia.

Migration flows through Belarus – EU border decrease

"Recent trends suggest that the migration flows that reveal themselves right on the border have been reducing. This is thanks to the efforts that Belarus has undertaken in this field, and not because the number of migrants has decreased. Annually about 25,000 foreign nationals were brought to liability for violation of the rules of entry, transit and stay in Belarus," said spokesperson of the Belarusian State Border Committee Alexander Tishchenko.
